torily concluded if this demand of the United States be insisted upon."

President Wilson's second note, made public to-night, insists upon an immediate answer only to the demand that General Huerta be eliminated from the electoral contest. All other points, says President Wilson, may be taken up later, suggesting, however, that they be taken up without great delay.

Mr. Gamboa, replying to the second note presented by Mr. Lind, said in effect that his first answer might stand for a reply to this note, but that President Huerta, desiring to exercise extreme forebearance, was willing to make further explanations to the suggestion effected by President Wilson that if the Mexican government "acts immediately and favorably" upon suggestions, President Wilson would "express to American bankers and their associates assurances that the government will look with favor upon extension of an immediate loan sufficient to meet the temporary needs of the present administration."

To this Senor Gamboa replicit. "There could not be a loan hig enough offered to induce those intrusted with the national dignity to put that dignity aside."
